There was a lively scene about the District-Attorney's office this morning when the foreman of the Grand Jury called for the papers of incorporation which the Flynn syndreate had filed with County Clerk Cotter last week. District-Attorney Ridgway sent to the County Clerk office for the papers. A reply came back that there were no such papers in the office. Mr. Ridgway grew impatient, and sent for the County Clerk. He was out of town, as were the two deputies. Mr. Ridgway then said he would have an attachment issued against the office. A subpoena was issued for Chief Clerk Frank L. Barnard, who appeared before the Grand Jury with the required papers.

Here are the five pairs of shoes which are said to have caused all the trouble."

Mrs. Massey then produced the shoes, which were said to have been ordered by Judge Massey for "the widow," and which, according to current stories, the shoemaker told Mrs. Massey had been ordered for the Judge's sister. Continuing Mrs. Massey said:

"Tuesday evening I went to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, New York, and arranged to meet Judge Massey at Mrs. Hanna's. I took my husband's picture with me, which I wished to present with our compliments to Mrs. Hanna. I hired a boy to carry the picture from One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street down to Mrs. Hanna's house.

"I did not have any trouble or have to force my way in the house, as has been alleged. We visited Mrs. Hanna for an hour and then came to Brooklyn.

"The story that I accidentally heard that Judge Massey was visiting Mrs. Hanna is untrue, as is the statement that I went to Mrs. Hanna's with a detective.

"My husband and I are very happy. He has been an invalid for four years. We are very devoted to each other." Mrs. Massey said that the story had been concocted by some of Judge Massey's enemies and had been circulated for political reasons.

Judge Massey was Judge Tighe's predecessor at the Butler Street Police Court, Brooklyn. At the end of his term the Judge was said to be in financial difficulties, and his friends raised a large purse for his benefit.
